Ribbon cut on new bridge approach

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Years of planning, negotiation and construction reached another milestone Thursday afternoon as city officials unveiled the new $14 million Project 421 Madison Gateway bridge approach connecting Madison's Main Street to U.S. 421 and the Milton-Madison Bridge.

The project is the result of years of discussions and planning over the logistical need for a more direct route on U.S. 421 from the Ohio River bridge to Main Street than the series of turns and stop signs travelers between Indiana and Kentucky have dealt with for decades. Former Mayor Damon Welch, who died unexpectedly in office last year, had signed an agreement in 2014 allowing the Indiana Department of Transportation to pick up the tab in exchange for the city and Jefferson County taking over 4.4 miles of surrounding state highways.

Surrounded by elected officials, friends and supporters, Welch's wife, Ginny, did the honors of cutting the ribbon to open the approach at about 2:30 p.m. Thursday as current Mayor Bob Courtney, who stepped in after the death of Welch, held the ribbon.

"I have committed to also honor the legacy of Mayor Damon Welch and finish the work he and his team started," Courtney said, standing in front of a new stonework wall with signage welcoming visitors to Madison. "Mayor Welch's vision for a safer approach became a reality today. I wish he were here to see this."

The city originally looked at four options for the approach as proposed by INDOT in 2016 — including doing nothing — with city officials settling on the most direct route from the existing bridge to Main Street to take semis and other vehicles off the series of narrow four-way stop intersections most vehicles navigated in the past.

INDOT's consulting engineering firm — Crawford, Murphy & Tilly — reviewed public feedback and the impacts a new approach might have on historic properties in 2017. The firm found that the approach as designed would improve corridor safety by about 20%,

Hartmans transform drainage ditch into Nifty Falls

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

Mark and Sandy Hartman had a problem. The drainage from a rainwater pipe on their newly-purchased home at 1240 East Scenic Drive had carved a ditch through their backyard, cutting it in half and making the area essentially useless as a recreational space.

But rather than lament their woes or give up, the Hartmans decided to get to work. They rerouted the water and in the process, ended up building a backyard oasis that would be the envy of anyone who sees it.

"When we bought the house we realized that we had this natural rock ridge back here and we decided to turn this into our own little backyard nature park," Mark said.

Over the next three years, the Hartmans began a labor of love that would eventually turn into "Nifty Falls," a free-flowing waterfall that descends nearly 30 feet and overlooks the Milton-Madison Bridge, the Ohio River and downtown Madison.

"I've always loved waterfalls and living in Madison, there are a lot of neat natural waterfalls in the area," Mark said. "With Clifty Falls here, we decided to do our own little waterfall here and name it Nifty Falls. We're pretty happy."

Other than a few of the larger jobs, the entire project was done by Mark and Sandy, from designing the landscaping, to clearing the dirt and installing the pumps for those rare times when the water stops flowing. Although it may have felt like some days the project would never get completed, the Hartmans knew they were onto something special.

"When Mark told me what he wanted to do I couldn't believe it," Sandy Hartman said. "But it just turned out beautifully."

It all started with that ditch. The rainwater pipe, which carried water off of Scenic View Drive and dumped right into the Hartman's backyard, carving that ditch. To make matters worse, vegetation had completely grown up along the ditch, taking over the area.

Man, 21, dies in early morning crash

BY COURIER STAFF REPORT

A Jefferson County man died in a single car accident near the intersection of State Roads 62 and 56 early Friday morning.

Travis L. Melton, 21, sustained life threatening injuries and was pronounced dead at the crash scene by the Jefferson County Coroner at about 12:55 a.m.

According to the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department, the car operated by Melton was southbound and left the roadway for undetermined reasons just prior to the S.R. 56-62 intersection, striking a Duke Energy box and breaking through a guard rail after leaving the roadway. The car came to a stop near Clifty Golf Range with Melton partially ejected from the vehicle.

The Jefferson County Sheriff's Office was assisted at the scene by the Jefferson County Coroner's Office, KDH EMS and the Hanover Fire Department.

decrease travel time by about 40% and reduce the impact on National Historic Landmarks and National Register of Historic Places properties overall.

Officials created a detailed plan of the project and completed land acquisition in 2018, before starting construction last year.

On Thursday Courtney touched on the project's place in the history of both the old and new Milton-Madison Bridge and hinted at the changes to come in the downtown area as a result of the project.

"Nearly a century ago the concrete was poured to build the bridge over the Ohio River connecting our two states. The bridge has been a major catalyst for economic growth and tourism in our region. I am grateful for the vision and dedication of my predecessors as well as the support of State Reps. Terry Goodin, Randy Frye, and Jim Lucas as well as city and county leadership who have all worked to improve our community.

"As we spend the next few months finalizing the bridge approach construction, we will turn our attention to redesigning Main Street, a new long-term endeavor that will further promote economic development, modernize traffic safety and further enhance our quality of life in Madison," Courtney said.

The ceremony also brought together former mayors Tim Armstrong and Al Huntington, who spoke on the economic and logistical vitality of a new approach to the community.

Huntington, who served from 1994 to 2007, stressed the economic vitality of the bridge and the new approach. He recalled when the old bridge was rehabbed in 1995 for $12 million and the impact it had on businesses and commuters in both Indiana and Kentucky. That bridge was later replaced with a new larger span that will serve the area for decades into the future.

"It's not just for the tourists that come and visit, because it'll be great for them, but it's also for our friends in Milton and Trimble County and Carroll County, because they are a part of us," Huntington said.

Armstrong reinforced that when talking about the new bridge that was planned under his tenure from 2008 to 2011 and completed in 2014.

"The talks went on, and that's what's so amazing about this community — through this whole process, meeting after meeting, Trimble County, here in Madison, citizens getting together — finally we came together and said 'We need a bridge,' " Armstrong said.

Armstrong recalled opposition from national historic preservation and parks agencies to building the new bridge, but said discussions for the overall need prevailed.

"But concessions were made and it developed into what we have today. We knew we had to have a safe river crossing," he said.

Although he lost his bid for a second term to Welch in 2012, Armstrong praised how the late mayor took over the project and developed the new approach into what it is today.

"It's just a great moment, and the only sad part about it is [Welch] isn't here with us to share it. But I'm sure he's up there looking down on us, smiling," Armstrong said.

District 66 State Rep. Terry Goodin and District 67 State Rep. Randy Frye both attended the ceremony and watched from the side.

After speeches from all three mayors and the ribbon cutting from Welch, Goodin and a few others climbed into cars parked on Harrison and became the first vehicles to pass through the new route. Regular traffic from the bridge was opened several few minutes later.

"I'm grateful for the support of then Governor now Vice President Mike Pence, Gov. Eric Holcomb, Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch, Congressman Greg Pence, our INDOT partners Commissioner Greg McGuinness, Kathy Eaton-McKalip and Tony McClellan, and Kyle Beaty of Beaty Construction, the design and engineering firms and the construction workers, all of whom have played a critical role in the new bridge and now the new approach," Courtney said.

"I would be remiss if I did not thank all of the residents of the area, particularly those in the heart of the construction zone who have endured a lot of inconvenience so we can stand here today. I appreciate your patience."

Commissioners vacate neglected county road

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Jefferson County Commissioners voted to vacate a small road near West Deputy Pike and Thompson Road Thursday night after a petition by area residents to close it.

The vacated portion of Volga Road, which used to transport drivers across Harberts Creek near Hopewell Baptist Church, has not been used since a new bridge was built in the same area several years ago, Commission President Dave Bramer said. Residents had contacted him that several locals are riding ATVs through the creek and creating a nuisance since the road fell into disrepair.

The road will no longer be included in Jefferson County's road system and road crews will likely block the are to traffic and trespassers in the future, Bramer said. Only two property owners live on that stretch of road, he added.

Also at Thursday's meeting, Jefferson County 4-H Fair Board President Scott Hubbard gave an update on the status of 4-H with the fair canceled this year due to COVID-19.

Membership continues to be a strength, Hubbard said. While many 4-H programs elsewhere are shrinking, Jefferson County had 533 youths involved last year and continues to grow.

However, 4-H will still miss out on about 57% of its annual revenue due to cancellation of the fair, Hubbard said. The Fair Board has stopped outsourcing maintenance and mowing of the fairgrounds, but donations from Indiana Farm Bureau have helped to offset the cost of incentives for 4-Hers and other expenses. Across the board, 4-H is looking to spend more than 40% less this year, Hubbard added.

Kids involved will still submit their contest entries to the fair to be judged digitally, although no in-person activities will be hosted.

Emergency Management Director Troy Morgan delivered news that his department recently unloaded 38 pallets of personal protective equipment at the fairgrounds with help from the county road department and said those resources will be allocated to the various county departments soon.

Sheriff Dave Thomas, meanwhile, said he had reached an agreement with the Crawford County Sheriff's Department, which houses most of Jefferson County's out-of-county inmates, to lower inmate housing cost from $35 a day to $20 a day. This will save the county "hundreds of thousands of dollars," Thomas noted.

That should be well received by members of County Council, who this year have approved an extra $500,000 in funds to cover inmate housing in other counties. Housing inmates in other counties is necessary to combat overcrowding. Thomas said jail populations are rising as expected following the various stage reopenings related to the pandemic.

Following Madison City Council's amendment to its golf cart ordinance Tuesday, commissioners Bramer and Little said the county may soon follow through with its own ordinance. The city approved banning golf carts on State Road 56 in the city limits except to cross that highway at a controlled intersection.

Kenny Garrett walked commissioners through several finished projects at Hanover Park. Construction was completed on a new tennis building to replace one that has stood for more than 30 years and Lowe's is donating picnic tables to the facility, he said. Hanover also intends to install a new door and siding on the baseball storage building. Town Council has spent about $37,000 on renovation projects the past three years, 50% of which the county has funded, Garrett said.

After clearing the trees and bushes, the Hartmans began work on rerouting the water. Once Mark discovered the rock ledges, he knew what he wanted to do.

"I had seen this gazebo and I decided to buy it. Then I had to figure out how to put it down here," Mark said. "A crane brought it in and placed it down here and once we got the rock all cleared off, we saw that we could move up even further. Then it was a matter of deciding how high we wanted to put the concrete wall and start the waterfall."

With the gazebo in place, the Hartmans began clearing dirt from the rock, revealing a stair-step feature that looks like it belongs in Clifty. At the base of the formation, Mark Hartman discovered a small cave, perfect for placing recirculating pumps to push the water back to the top.

From there, it was a matter of finishing off the cosmetic touches. Mark Hartman designed a walkway, a wooden staircase to get down to the falls and a bridge across from the falls to the other side. A small deck was built opposite of the gazebo, giving two areas from which to enjoy the view. Lights were added to the walkways and a "Nifty Falls" sign, in the design of a National Park Service sign, provided the finishing touches.

It wasn't an easy task, but with Mark — an executive at Morgan Foods in Austin — and Sandy — a teacher — both working from home this spring due to the COVID-19 pandemic shutdown, there was plenty of time to finish their creation.

"It was a lot of work but it was worth it," Sandy said. "Sometimes we'll come down here and eat dinner and my daughter and her friends will sunbathe. And the view is just spectacular. The fireworks are just amazing."

Mark Hartman has spent his career working in the food business and admits that he knows little about engineering. But he wasn't about the let that stop him.

"I decided that we could figure it out," he said with a smile. "We worked with the company that we bought the pump from to figure out exactly how we wanted to do it. We actually built a couple of prototypes of the tanks and figured out they would work."

"He would sit at the table with two cups full of water trying to figure it out," Sandy laughed.

Before the project was even finished, neighbors would show up to check out the sights and the progress and the Falls became sort of a neighborhood hangout. It was one of the neighbors who suggested that the Hartmans tell others about their creation.

"We hadn't really given it any thought but they were like 'more people need to know about this,' " Mark said. "I think it would be wonderful for photographers to come up and use it and for people to see it. It's just a wonderful place."

Mark says that other than possibly adding tube-lighting underneath the falls, he considers the project finished, although one never knows. Still, he is proud of the creation and says that there is nothing better than coming home to your own waterfall.

"I love my job and I love what I do, but then you get to come home and enjoy the backyard after a long day at work," he said.

Keeping clear boundaries

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I was given up for adoption at four months old and was adopted by my maternal grandparents. I was raised as an only child, even though I knew who my siblings were and saw them regularly. My biological mother sowed seeds of hatred and division between my siblings and myself at every opportunity.

Upon her death, we found out that she had cashed in her life insurance policies and had no cemetery plot. Now, mind you, I ceased having a relationship with this lady for the last 20 years of her life.

While making the funeral arrangements, I agreed to help my siblings by giving them one of my own burial plots with the understanding that they must pay for the opening and closing and the vault. We all agreed to borrow the money for the funeral, and we all signed the loan. My brother agreed to borrow the money for the opening and closing separately. Two days prior to the funeral, he informed me that he did not get the loan. I agreed to pay for it with the stipulation that they would reimburse me.

I found out a month after the funeral that he did, in fact, get the loan and blew the money partying. I confronted him about it, and he was irate that I'd even asked him about it. And in reference to the loan for the funeral, my siblings made just two payments of their share and never brought it up again.

So, my wife and I spent $8,000 of our savings and paid the loan off. I advised them at the next family get-together that I was not going to bury anybody else, and they needed to make sure that they had their affairs in order.

They have said on numerous occasions that I should have taken care of everything because I had a better job and made the most money. I was made out to be the bad guy because I refused.

Now, their big project is to purchase her a headstone. and they want me to help pay for it. I have told them no on numerous occasions, but my sister brings it up whenever she calls. My wife and I are both retired and are unable to shell out money like we use to. I'm tired and frustrated by all of this. What more can I say or do? — Frustrated Sibling

Dear Frustrated: It's not about what you can do; it's about what you can't do. You can't keep caving to your siblings' will and shelling out money. You've done the right thing in drawing this line. As relationship coach Jenna Korf says, "If someone gets angry with you for setting a boundary, consider that a good sign that the boundary was necessary." Stand your ground. And consider attending a support group such as Families Anonymous, which can help you lovingly detach from toxic behavior in your family.

Know that sometimes people are intent on holding a grudge, and there's nothing you can say to loosen their grip. That's too bad for them, as they're the ones carrying the weight.

Gratitude for dads

Dear Readers: Happy Fathers Day! In this poem, William Wordsworth celebrates being able to see the world through his son's eyes. He celebrates the childlike wonder that his son has, a playful curiosity that is too often lost in adulthood.

'ANECDOTE FOR FATHERS'

(SET ITAL)I have a boy of five years old;
His face is fair and fresh to see;
His limbs are cast in beauty's mould,
And dearly he loves me.
One morn we strolled on our dry walk,
Our quiet home all full in view,
And held such intermitted talk
As we are wont to do.
My thoughts on former pleasures ran;
I thought of Kilve's delightful shore,
Our pleasant home when spring began,
A long, long year before.
A day it was when I could bear
Some fond regrets to entertain;
With so much happiness to spare,
I could not feel a pain.
The green earth echoed to the feet
Of lambs that bounded through the glade,
From shade to sunshine, and as fleet
From sunshine back to shade.
Birds warbled round me — and each trace
Of inward sadness had its charm;
Kilve, thought I, was a favored place,
And so is Liswyn farm.
My boy beside me tripped, so slim
And graceful in his rustic dress!
And, as we talked, I questioned him,
In very idleness.(END ITAL)

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I am writing to tell you my story about adopting a child and hope it will help others. Back in the 1980s, my wife and I were considered an "infertile couple." After years of trying, we were unable to have children. So, with much thought, we decided to adopt.

Back then, our state had what they called "semi-closed" adoptions — only medical information was divulged. When we submitted our stories, our caseworker went through them to redact any identifying information. Those stories, along with other information, were part of our file. Our files were given to the birthmothers. They would go through the stack of files to make their choice of parents for their child. When we submitted the stories, our caseworker told us that it's just a waiting game, and that it could be another two or three years.

To our surprise, we got the call only two weeks later. A baby boy! We couldn't believe it! I asked our caseworker why so soon. She confessed that, after she read my story, she thought we would be picked quickly. She explained that birthmothers aren't looking for mothers; they are looking for fathers. They look for adoptive fathers who had a good relationship with their fathers. I've never forgotten that and tried to spend as much time with him and my other sons as I could. Please, dads, spend as much time as you can with your children. It will pay more dividends than you realize. — Forever Grateful Dad

Dear Forever Grateful Dad: Thank you for your heartwarming letter. You sound like a wonderful, caring father. Your gratitude for your father is heartwarming, and I believe that same gratitude will continue with all your sons. Bravo! Happy Father's Day to all the dads out there.
